

High School vs. College video Transcription

In High School:

"Another test aced without studying, Nice!"

In College:

"Why? Why did I binge watch Game of Thrones instead of studying? Bummer."

College exams are not like high school tests. Multiple choice is hard. Essay tests are here. If you don't study you aren't going to pass.

In High School:

Text message: Report card is in. We need to talk about your grades.

In College:

"So how are your grades this semester?" "I don't know I'm about to find out. Yes!"

For the most part, there are no report cards in college. Keeping track of how well you're doing in class is up to you.

In High School:

*Bell Rings* "Alright I'll catch you later." "Wait where are you going?" "5th period, duh same as every day, come on."

In College:

"We're gonna ace this test!" "Yeah we are." "So what are you doing later?" "Actually I have a bout 2 hours to kill before my next class. So I want to see if I can meet up with my academic advisor, then hit up the gym, and hopefully afterwards go to library and get some more reading done. Do you want to meet me there?" "Yeah, definitely!" "Alright."

In college you get control of your time and how you spend it. There no one wandering the halls wondering why you aren't in class.

In High School

"Thanks for coming in. I just wanted to meet and talk with you about you grades. You seem to be doing really well. Do you have any questions?" "No. I feel like I'm doing pretty well in this class."

In College:

"I think I'm failing this class, and I might fail the final." "Well unfortunately, there's not much I can do for this point. Why don't you come to class more or get some tutoring? Good luck."

In high school, if you were struggling it was your teacher's responsibility to help you. If you didn't learn, your teacher got the blame. In college, your success is up to you, not your professors.
